B&B's Kitchen (Italy) is a family-run business that started in 1977. It is known for a "traditional Italian cooking" with a touch of home cuisine. The widely assumed similarity between the treatment of episodic depression and of chronic depression has been repeatedly challenged. It has been suggested that major depression is best understood as a life-long condition that cyclically manifests with symptoms that are "episodic" as opposed to "chronic." Affective narrowing, the idea that painful emotional states are more strongly associated with one another than they are with other types of experience, has been one important aspect of the chronic conceptualization of depression. We suggest that affective narrowing is an important facet of emotional narrowing in general. The present study thus investigated affective narrowing in depression and its potential mediating processes. Participants completed a dot-probe task while focusing on negative, positive, and neutral stimuli. The results showed that negative affective narrowing was present in depression, and possibly mediated its relationship to cognitive narrowing. It was also present in a participant group with a history of anxiety disorders (but not in a comparison group). The findings suggest that affective narrowing may play a role in the development and maintenance of depression.
